on our COMMUNITY PARTNER AGENCIES

This edition's focus is on Booker T. Washington Community Center and its success in addressing school readiness, student success, and youth development and opportunities to lead healthy, active lifestyles.

Butler County United Way has been a long-time funder of the BTW Community Center Collaboration through the lead agency, Great Miami Valley YMCA. Other collaborative partners include the City of Hamilton, the Boys & Girls Club of Hamilton, the Fitton Center for Creative Arts, Miami University, the Hamilton City School District, the OSU Extension Office, Envision Partnerships, the United Methodist Church Food Program, Dohn 22+, ELL, the Boy and Girl Scouts, YWCA of Hamilton, SELF, Central Connections, Senior Council on Aging, Hamilton Police Department, and Badin High School. Through these many collaborative partners, a unique combination of services, representative of the content expertise of each partner agency, is made available to the students who attend the Community Center.

On average, BTW Community Center serves 60-75 youth and teens daily. Ebony Brock, BTW Community Center Director, recently stated in a Hamiltonian Magazine article, "My hope is to see our children grow and become change agents, good stewards of their gifts and talents. I want people to say BTW children are leading in art, social responsibility, STEM, community service and more."

Working together toward a common goal breeds success. The Booker T. Washington Center Collaboration is proof!
